Secondary-School Administration Abstracts

Published under the direction of the Department of Secondary-School Principals of the National Education Association with the co-operation of the Judd Club

The Judd Club is a group of principals of the high schools of the suburbs of Chicago who meet once a month during the scholastic year for dinner and the evening with Charles H. Judd, Director of the School of Education of the University of Chicago. At the meetings administrative problems of the secondary school are discussed.

BOOKS

Pringle, Ralph W. The Psychology of High School Discipline. New York: D. C. Heath and Co., 1931. Pp. 362.

Poor discipline is the greatest single cause of failure among high-school teachers. Poor methods, mistakes due to inexperience, and lack of understanding of adolescent nature bear a direct relationship to disciplinary failure. The safest and most fruitful way of attacking conduct control in the high school is the application of what is known concerning the nature and need of high-school pupils. Discipline is psychological in its methods and constructive in its aims. It is primarily concerned with a state of mind, and it implies a guarded shifting of responsibility for conduct to the pupils themselves. The functions of high-school discipline are: (1) to secure such conduct from the pupils as is in every way conducive to the work in hand, (2) to secure this conduct in a way that continually enriches personality and contributes to the formation of character in the widest sense.

All mental life proceeds from a physical basis. A complete account of the sources of human conduct would include much concerning the functions of all organs and tissues of the body. The endocrine glands through their secretions are concerned with the intensity and the regularity of almost every vital process of the body. Enough is now known of the potency of the internal secretions to warrant a sympathetic and conservative judgment upon motives during the period of adolescence when the glands and the automatic nervous system are most dominant in their influence. "Instincts and impulses are highly flexible starting points for activities which are diversified according to the way in which they are used." Any impulse may become organized into almost any disposition according to the way it interacts with surroundings. Discipline then is equivalent to redirecting the developing propulsive energy. From the standpoint of both adolescent development and youthful behavior the sex instincts are fundamental. When sympathetically interpreted these instinctive promptings, sympathy, gregariousness, altruism, a desire for approbation and self-assertion, may be turned into powerful motives for conduct. Since impulsive reactions tend to become habitual, a knowledge of habits and of the laws of habit formation is fundamental. High-school pupils must readily form desirable and sustaining habits through the performance of some meaningful activity. The will is the last of the psychological processes which merge into one another and have as their physical basis the nervous and glandular systems. Volitional responses can be modified only by changing some of the antecedents of behavior. Those who supply and control the environmental stimuli must be able to discover in the individual the antecedents of possible conduct. The group life of the high-school period provides the medium par excellence for the training of the will.

Study of group unity and the social integration which it exemplifies is necessary. Nearly all objectionable behavior is due to bad group habits. All the members of the group, and all that happens within the group act as stimuli for the conditioning of individual responses.

Successful pupil control in the classroom resolves itself primarily into effective teaching. When classroom conditions are perfect, a continuous meeting of the psychological demands as they arise takes place; class control is indirect and discipline is a by-product, conspicuous by its absence. The class exercise is a thoroughly coöperative enterprise. Applying the principle of self-activity to the classroom conduct control becomes a matter of intellectual and emotional response control. Skill in control is primarily a matter of diagnosis, a successful noting of symptoms, and a prompt inferring of causes. Pupil causes either issue from the physical or psychical make-up of the pupil or from more objective factors such as wide intellectual and social variations and unfavorable material environment. Attempted control through "soft pedagogy," lack of self-control, lack of a sense of humor, and dullness are teacher weaknesses to which many difficulties may be traced.

The spirit of the school is manifested in the conduct in the study hall and the home room. Group morale is a powerful social and moral force, and where there is a wholesome esprit de corps in these groups all other activities of the school profit by it.

The high-school assembly is a safe and sure means of exercising indirect conduct control of the entire school. It is a means of creating and fostering a helpful social conscience, a sound morale, a proper esprit de corps, a habit of group coöperation, and a worthy loyalty to the school.

The extra-curriculum program also offers a vital influence in indirect control. The impulsive life of the pupil is brought into conformity with the needs of the group and, thus, under the authority of the group.

Discipline should be a genuinely educative influence; hence punishments are to be judged by their ultimate effect on character and future conduct. The modern conception implies an effort to aid the troublesome pupil to open new neutral paths by means of suggestions and counter-suggestions. By so doing undesirable behavior is turned into habitual social conduct. Behavior situations are too complex and too dynamic for the application of predetermined lines of attack; there are no universal remedies in the realm of social ills.

Pupil participation in the deliberations pertaining to the welfare and management of the school provides a suitable opportunity for individual and group self-expression. Both individual and group welfare are best realized when individuality develops under the constant sense of social responsibility, for socialized individuality is the aim of education.

Walter J. Gifford And Clyde P. Shorts, Problems in Educational Psychology. New York: Doubleday, Doran and Company, 1931.

The objectives and scope of the educational psychology of to-day are based upon the thesis that education is living and upon the interpretation of the knowledge, attitudes, and habits acquired in the classroom. In attempting to answer questions centering in the learning processes it contributes to the evaluation of certain methods and techniques. The purpose of the student's efforts in this field is two-fold: to aid in his preparation for teaching, and to further his own growth. This double focus of his study is motivated and directed by the organization into units of the latest and best thought in the literature of educational psychology. The problem attitude thus engendered should enable the learner to develop a set of working concepts in a philosophy of education and at the same time foster his own mental growth. It is only as the principles are put to the test in his own experience that he is likely to be able to use them in his later work as a teacher.

The learner should be oriented in his study by becoming familiar with the physical mechanisms underlying the mental processes. Mental life and behavior are best explained by the scientific method. By means of it the concept of stimulus and response is derived and mental life is considered functionally rather than from the point of view of form and structure. The sources and types of inheritance whereby man comes into possession of these mechanisms and their function in the individual's development are problems of great significance. Social and educational leaders are directing their energies to studies of the relative weight of heredity and environment in the development and education of the child.

Recent challenges of the so-called "instinct theory" have produced the wholesome result of eliminating from consideration the extraordinary claims for instinctive drives. A reasonable procedure for the student is to develop an unbiased, yet critical attitude to all claims of the experts regarding natural tendencies, seeking the truth in each. The newer experimental work has focused interest definitely upon the importance of the higher emotions as the conditioning factors of human behavior. Educators are incorporating the yet meager results of the scientific study of these traits in their educational philosophy. Their interrelation and interdependence, and the ways in which they may become motivating forces to desirable behavior should be understood and vigorously practiced in all the activities of the school.

Although learning begins in the strengthening and redirecting of the native tendencies, it differs widely in various life situations and school studies. Freeman's classification of the learning processes offers a useful basis for their study: (1) sensori-motor, (2) perceptual, (3) associative, (4) problem solving. The organization of the subject-matter into units, projects, and problems, modifies instruction to a point where thinking becomes the logical corollary of good teaching. By supplementing his study of the observations and conclusions reached by the expert experimenters with some simple experiments of his own, the student will be materially helped in his understanding of the basic laws of child learning and in the interpretation of them in terms of educational procedure. He will need this knowledge in meeting problems relating to the physical, emotional, and mental factors which constitute mental efficiency. Through the coöperation of the mental hygienist, the psychologist, and the physiologist, work and play schedules that enable the school and home to set up better working conditions are being developed.

Educational psychology has made an especial contribution through the study of human variations. The gradual recognition of the wide range of individual differences is evidenced in the growing interest in individual instruction and the rapid development of the educational testing movement. Mental testing programs, the measurement of special aptitudes and talents, and the scientific, objective achievement tests offer unlimited possibilities for the adjustment of the individual child in his school work. The use of standardized, diagnostic tests and of the new type of objective tests prepared by the teacher have raised the objectives of the testing movement from mere classification and promotion to that of the teaching procedures whereby the individual needs of the pupils are recognized, and the lockstep in instruction correspondingly reduced.

Recognition of the different stages of mental growth through which the child passes is found in the development of the pre-school and the junior high school organizations. The foundations of sound mental growth should be made in early childhood and the school and the home must, at the adolescent period, build upon the foundation by providing an ever-widening opportunity for expansion in interests and responsibilities.

The student's survey of mental life should reach its consummation in a clearly defined notion of a wholesome, healthy, and well integrated personality. He will realize this outcome from his study in so far as he is able to assume an objective attitude toward himself.

Carpenter, W. W., and Rufi, John.—The Teacher and Secondary-School Administration. Boston: Ginn and Co., 1931. Pp. 460.

High-school teachers are indirect agents of the state. As such they have responsibilities to their superiors, local, state, and national. Besides their activities as teachers in the art of teaching, they have important contacts to maintain with the administration of their school, with their immediate public, and with their cult. Their position as employees of the state makes it necessary that they be cognizant of their responsibilities under the state constitution, the state legislature, and their state board of education. On the lower level of their local board of education there are still further demands on their activities. In their immediate sphere high-school teachers should recognize their obligation to exercise leadership as counsellors in educational, vocational, and moral guidance. Again they have necessary duties of keeping records so that pupil-accounting is on a scientific and not on an emotional basis. High-school teachers should know and appreciate the problems involved in building a schedule of recitations. Every high-school teacher who can be a leader in any special group of pupils enlisted in extra-curriculum work, takes on an added value as a member of a high-school corps. One of the most important functions of teachers is to lead their pupils without their becoming aware that they are under control. To maintain dignity, to lead but not drive, in short to guide their social groups to the proper goals are attributes which should receive the hall mark of high approval. High-school teachers should modestly tell the world what is done in the school. They must not forget that they are the finest of public servants. As such they must perform a diplomatic and efficient service by keeping the home en rapport with the pupil. Also they must never violate the high code of ethics which will keep them on the professional plane of their vocation. Their pre-service training should be high, but it cannot exclude in-service training, if they fulfill their obligations as members of a real profession. Therefore summer school, travel, and membership in professional groups are items that should not be ignored. School costs, building maintenance, janitorial efficiency, health and hygiene of pupils, textbooks, instructional material, and equipment should not be unknown territory to high-school teachers. The new movement to measure in a scientific manner the achievements and talents of pupils will aid teachers immensely in the solution of their pupil problems. And last every worker in the secondary-school field should know the salient features of the history of secondary-school education.

Judd, Professor Charles H. "Why Adult Education?" School and Society, XXXII (December 6, 1930), 743-50.

The teachers of the United States have absorbed more adult education during the last decade than has any other single class of persons. It would perhaps be safe to go further and to venture the estimate that the teachers of this country are a majority of all the people who have continued their intellectual training beyond the period of adolescence. Whether teachers go voluntarily or involuntarily, they are resorting to centers of study in unprecedented numbers. No teacher is truly professional who does not take advantage of the numerous opportunities for adult education. Many other spheres of professional and industrial life are showing this same situation. One of the railroads which crosses the state of New Jersey recently changed from steam power to electricity; the electrification of this railroad made it necessary for hundreds of engineers and their assistants to change radically their physical and mental habits. The State Department of Public Instruction through its division of industrial education came to the aid of these people and gave them a course in electrical engines. Childhood is not the only period during which training for life is required. Hundreds of other examples could be given of a similar nature. The only difference is that in many cases there was no department of public instruction at hand to offer the opportunities for training necessary to save the day. Industry is compelling a revision of our theories and beliefs about education, even though we are only partly aware of what is going on. The forces which have compelled teachers to go to summer school and engineers to study electricity are the same as those which have operated to expand the whole educational system. Adult education is not an isolated phenomenon. It is a part of the general movement to increase the training of all kinds of people. Schools have expanded because modern industry, commerce, and politics have forced all individuals who seek success to acquire knowledges and skills which cannot be provided in rudimentary schools. The same causes which have filled our secondary schools and colleges are now creating a demand for the education of adults. The cause of the adult-education movement is the industrial revolution, which became a powerful force in the life of this country during the eighties. Striking evidence that education has developed in response to the demands of machine industry is to be found in the evolution of correspondence courses and of other types of practical courses supplied by private institutions for the training of machinists. Public night schools have been very generally organized by the city school systems of the country. The two facts which limit the scope of the influence of public night schools are, first, that they emphasize relatively elementary training; many of their classes are designed to serve those who have had very little previous training. Secondly, the public is so little accustomed to the support of adult education by funds derived from taxation that in times of financial stress night schools are among the first divisions of the school system to be discontinued. By far the greater part of adult education in the United States is privately initiated and supported. No individual can keep pace with modern life except by continually renewing his intellectual outlook. The satisfactory organization of education for adults requires a new approach to the problem, unbiased by the formulas derived from the education of children. New and large resources are required in order to produce suitable material to attract the interests of adults. Adults must be induced to participate more energetically in the cultivation of the intellectual skills necessary to keep their minds vigorously active. The state must devote resources to the carrying out of this program because the good of communities is as much dependent on the proper training of parents, citizens, and workers as it is on the training of children.

Judd, Professor Charles H. "How Can American Educational Forces Cooperate More Effectively?" School and Society, XXXIII (March 14, 1931), 351-56.

Cooperation is not cheap. It cannot be had for the asking. Cooperation can be purchased only by the expenditure of energy and the exercise of intelligence. A charitable explanation of the present-day lack of cooperation in the American educational system is that we are all so busy performing our special duties that we have no time or energy to devote to cooperation. There is another and less charitable explanation of our lack of cooperation. When we are quite frank with ourselves, we have to admit that we are in no inconsiderable measure in competition with one another. Educational work is very personal, and human nature is characterized by a natural desire to excel—to dominate. Cooperation is not as natural as self-assertion. Cooperation requires far-sighted vision. Cooperation is the expression of a type of intelligent appreciation of the larger advantages which can be gained only by the organized concentration of the energy of many workers. How shall we develop a higher level of cooperation in our schools? Four formulas are suggested: (1) Let it be recognized that the function of one part of the school system is not the same as the function of any other part of the system. Each should perform that for which he is ordained, not over-advising the other or trespassing on the other's domain. (2) The different functions of the different grades must be carefully arranged after systematic experimentation and scientific study of the stages through which human nature passes in the course of its natural development. The much-to-be-desired goal of a sequence of educational procedures based on a full knowledge of natural development is not going to be reached by mere wishing for it. School systems will have to learn that the price of coordination is investment of energy in the study of children's natures. The only way to understand nature is to make a scientific study of what goes on in the course of a child's development. The plea for a natural sequence is not to be misinterpreted as advocacy of that wild idea that natural sequence means the succession of activities dictated by childish caprice. The curriculum should be planned and arranged scientifically and should give in its administration the keenest satisfaction to pupils and teachers. (3) The third formula is this: Teachers should be required to possess definite knowledge regarding the organization and achievements of all the educational institutions which make up the school system. Coordination of the educational system cannot be achieved when those at one level are utterly out of touch with all except their immediate associates. (4) The fourth formula is this: True coordination inside the school is impossible unless there is coordination of the school with the civilization in which and for which the school exists.

Cooper, William John. "The Place of Education in the Development of Pan American Amity," School and Society, XXXIII (April 4, 1931), 447-51.

The scientific study of education, hardly a quarter of a century old, has been concerned primarily with methods of instruction and only incidentally with the content of courses of study. There will later develop an American philosophy of education; it will be child-centered and empirical in character. An educational program based on such a philosophy will concern itself primarily with the potentialities of children. It will seek to measure the ability and interests which each possesses and develop them to the highest degree. Were leaders in education to concern themselves with building up better international understanding, and were we still holding to the notion of the school as society's instrument of propaganda, our efforts here should be in the direction of erecting some sort of Pan American superstate toward which we could develop loyalty and should be concerned with working out a course of study. We must determine: What do we want the citizens of these republics a generation hence to think about each other? Do we want disarmament, or an insistence on arbitration of all inter-American disputes, or devotion to a Pan American League to be established, or what? We must have something more specific than a declared purpose to develop international good-will. A plan must be worked out which can be put into operation in each republic as conditions are favorable. Probably all would agree that a survey of the history of other peoples, the development of an appreciation for their art, music, and literature, and a mastery of their language, can hardly fail to result in enriching the individual's life and liberating him from the barriers set by race, national origins, and the like. If on the higher levels these studies are made comparative in nature, they should be powerful instruments for creating mutual understanding and good-will. The first step in the realization of such a program is the establishment of an agency for gathering and disseminating complete and accurate information. This has been accomplished. The Pan American Union, governed by a board consisting of the diplomatic corps of the American Republics, stationed at Washington, under the chairmanship of the Secretary of State, has developed a splendid library, has gathered and disseminated a vast amount of valuable information through pamphlets and a monthly bulletin printed in four languages. This organization, however, has neither the power nor the resources to instruct people of the Americas what to do. There should be also a series of radio broadcasts furnishing samples of the music produced by our sister republics and setting forth other high lights of their culture.

Dargan, Jane. "Organizing a Girls' League in High School," School and Society, XXXIII (April 18, 1931), 534-36.

Boys' clubs, girls' leagues, debating societies, athletics and sports are now encouraged and used as a means of developing a fine art of living. Every child has latent powers, individual capacities, and potential abilities which may be discovered and fostered through social activities in the school. The Girls' League of the Morgan Gardiner Bulkeley High School in Hartford, Connecticut, has been an active agent in bringing to light undiscovered possibilities in the student body. The girls cooperate with many worthy activities: They assist in canvassing for the A. A. membership drive; they attend the first football game in a body chaperoned by teachers; they decorate the tables for the Boys' Club supper, and act as waitresses at the supper. While the details of each year's program vary, the general plan is about the same. The executive council arranges a calendar for the year and this is approved by the league at a general meeting. A mother-daughter tea is held about the middle of December. The league does social service work in December. Contributions from the student body are sent to the Charity Organization Society, the Catholic Charitable Bureau, and the United Jewish Charities. A Valentine supper for league members is the February event, with guest speakers and teachers of the school present. The March meeting has been a vocational guidance meeting at which women prominent in various professions and occupations address the girls on the subject of their own particular field. Other meetings of various natures are carried out. The Girls' League is an active agent in making its ideals and motto those of the entire student body.

Wyman, Carl E. "Visual Education in a Representative Junior High School," School and Society, XXXIII (May 2, 1931), 592-93.

The use of visual aids in teaching in the junior high schools of Cleveland, Ohio, has steadily increased during the last year under a new system of publicity and distribution. The board of education has provided larger appropriations for visual materials; the educational museum has provided a more systematic plan for the increased use of these materials, and finally the directors of visual education in the respective schools have promoted an increased interest in, and use of the vast store of varied materials available. In this particular junior high school, visual aids were first limited to use in the social science department. Gradually the general science teachers discovered materials of value to them in their teaching. But within the last half year, the school director of visual education has asked other departments to utilize some of the visual aids available at the Educational Museum. Where a few sets of slides for use in the social science department would be used per month in previous years, now there are eight to a dozen or more sets used a week. The boys in a school club known as the "Projection Club" hold themselves in readiness to operate the motion-picture machines and stereopticons at any period of the day. They are given the information regarding the materials to be run and the place they are to be run a day or more in advance. They prepare the room, set up and return the machine as well as run the picture or slides for the teacher. These boys are taken from a study hall. The teacher can then have time to take her attendance and discuss the picture with her class as it is being shown. Maps, models, movies, slides, and even scientific instruments, mounted pictures, mounted animal specimens, the movie machines, and stereopticons are available and now in constant use. The ideal situation in the use of this visual educational material would be: (1) to arouse sufficient interest for its inclusion with the subject-matter of the curriculum; (2) to use it at the proper time to clinch subject-matter in the minds of the pupils; (3) to secure mechanical aids in this program by including a sufficient number of rooms equipped with screens and proper window shades; (4) to correlate subject-matter through the combined use of films, slides, and mounted pictures on the same topic; (5) to observe critically the results.

Briggs, Professor Thomas H. "The Fetish of the Physical," School and Society, XXXIII (May 23, 1931), 677-83.

In speaking before a meeting of the Junior High School Principals' Association of New York, comprising an audience of fifteen hundred persons, representing more than sixty schools, Professor Briggs declared that it seems to be a characteristic of our nation, certainly in education, to assume that if a physical organization is effected, desired results will automatically follow. Significant changes from education come only from hard work with the most effective machinery. Planning for educational reform requires more than buildings and reorganization of administrative units. Besides this fetish of faith in the physical, which is rampant in New York as everywhere else, this city suffers from an educational system so large, so made up of checks and counter-checks that it exhausts too large a part of its generated energy in running itself. No fetish of the physical will enable education to keep up with the world. Our only hope is in an education redevise in light of the life of today and of tomorrow, adapted to the abilities of every youth, whatever his kind. Secondary education is not doing its job today. It cannot until it faces the life of today, until it teaches all the young of today. Secondary education is precious and must be preserved. The beginning of preservation is by means of a perfected junior high school.

Oxley, Ruth. "Comparative Study of the Intelligence of Beginners in Senior High School Foreign Language," School and Society, XXXIII (May 23, 1931), 695-96.

A year ago, a table was given in the School and Society magazine which showed the variability of intelligence quotients of 344 students of foreign language beginning classes of the Long Beach Junior College, Long Beach, California. This table indicated that the Spanish students rank lowest of the three groups listed. The writer then said that instructors of Spanish dealing with inferior material cannot be governed by the same standards as teachers of Latin, German, and French, dealing with highly selected groups. Miss Oxley gives here a table showing the variability of the intelligence quotients of 791 students of foreign language beginning classes in the Polytechnic Senior High School and the Woodrow Wilson High School of Long Beach, California, during the spring and fall semesters of 1930. The condition prevailing in the junior college exists to a comparable degree in the senior high school. Although there is a variation in the median level of intelligence for the several languages from semester to semester, the relative degree of selection remains, with one exception, practically the same. This fact seems to substantiate the conclusion that students of inferior ability are apparently choosing Spanish in preference to other languages, and this probably lowers pupil achievement. Perhaps the general delusion that Spanish is easy draws many recruits from those who would not consider the study of a language reputedly more difficult. Inferior groups cannot compete with more highly selected groups. Those responsible for the linguistic destiny of the students should take cognizance of these facts and either simplify the material of courses of study or lower the standards of achievement for groups of less ability.

Wilbur, Dr. Ray Lyman. "The Radio in Our Republic," School and Society, XXXIII (May 30, 1931), 709-13.

The human voice is as characteristic as the face. The combination of tongue, vocal cords, muscles, lungs, nerves, and nerve centers used in talking is strictly individual in character. The approach to the human mind through the ear is of like importance to that through the eye. In fact, it is said that those who have lost their hearing have a greater sense of deprivation than those who are blind. The human voice can build up in our minds a series of pictures and ideas, with a whole series of subsequent pictures and ideas working in an almost endless chain. The growth of broadcasting parallels in many ways that of the American newspaper and magazine. By adding television to the radio, we will be able to offer to the individual man great opportunities. Broadcasting is closely associated with public service. The radio in our country should be studied and regulated to make it a potent instrument in the happiness and advance of our people, but it should not become either a private or a government monopoly.

Douglass, Harl R. "Types and Fields of Curriculum Research in Secondary Education During 1929," School Review, XXXVIII (November, 1930), 656-62.

Early in the year 1930 the writer sent numerous requests for reports on any researches dealing with curriculum which might have been completed or carried on during 1929. The 1929 issues of eight leading periodicals and some half-dozen books and monographs which deal with curriculum research were investigated. From these sources data relative to seventy-four curriculum researches on high-school level were obtained. In practically all cases the field of study was confined to the subjects as now organized in high schools and did not include the objectives of secondary education. Classified by subjects, the number of contributions in the field of English (twenty-two studies) was greatest. History and social studies were represented by twelve studies, science by nine, mathematics by eight, and industrial arts by four. Household arts, Latin, and character education were each represented by two studies; and study of vocations, music, art, physical education, commercial subjects, professional education, and religion, by one each. Six of the investigations dealt with the curriculum as a whole. None of the seventy-four studies were devoted to modern languages. The major emphasis was on what should be taught rather than on what are or should be the objectives of the various field of instruction and how they should be arranged or placed. The writer believes that the contributions of research to the secondary-school curriculum have as yet been trivial and have been based on preconceptions which in themselves are not established on scientific foundations and which to many educators seem definitely unsupportable.

Rugg, Earle U. "Some Recent Criticisms of American Contemporary Life and Their Implications for Public Education," School Review, XXXIX (January, 1931), 15-32.

Teachers and educators should study the real implications of the criticisms of frontier thinkers (1) as a phase of their professional growth, and (2) these criticisms are sources of the new curriculum. A partial bibliography accompanies the article.

The writer registers his "protest against the narrowing influences of specialization in present educational research," and states his belief that "the collection of such evidence has been largely made an end in itself rather than as a means to an end."

The seven cardinal principles do not receive their proper values in time allotments in schools with one eighth of the total time given to the four ideal objectives of health, vocational training, worthy home membership, and wise use of leisure; and "there are gaps and deficiencies in the allotment of time to the remaining three."

Complications which arise in providing for interpreting present day life are (1) an indirect approach, (2) lack of attention to proper utilization of life outside the school, (3) a heterogeneous population, (4) a shift in personal responsibility.

The import of recent criticism of American life for curriculum making is considered under five divisions.

1. Economic life. The school program will be influenced by the facts that earning a living is of primary importance for 95 per cent of the American people; that 85 to 90 per cent of present day jobs can be mastered in a few hours, days or weeks on the job.

There is need for "unspecialized" practical activities, and for economic appreciation. "There is need to teach everyone certain general practical arts."

2. Home and family relationships. Although the home is chiefly responsible for the child's habits, dispositions, attitudes, tastes, and ideals, the acquisition of learnings and culture which should result cannot be left to chance. Certain points stressed by the critics which seemed to have been ignored are (1) the importance of the biological heritage and training in the psychology of parenthood, (2) "consumer economics," (3) effects of present day living on the home.

3. The time surplus. The individual has been deprived of the creative act in work and has been given increased time for leisure to spend as he pleases. However, the studies made indicate that recreation today is commercialized, largely passive (we do not create our own entertainment), patterned for the masses, and the emphasis is on quantity not quality.

Little has been done by the schools, and that little does not appear to carry over to adult life in literature, music, art, and physical education. The most important extension of the educational ladder has been almost completely ignored. Adult education is the means of continuous growth in American education.

4. Citizenship. The rise of democracy has culminated in the realization of the ideal of universal suffrage with these results: (1) the survival of the Jacksonian theory that any American is fitted for any task, (2) chief reliance is placed upon a negative form of social control, legislation, (3) a tremendous burden has been thrown upon government by the complexity of modern life.

The results show that "the gift of suffrage does not create the will to use it;" "law is not a panacea for controlling social behaviour," and "we tolerate inefficiency and even corruption in politics."

The school must capitalize vicarious experiences through the new type of reading materials in the social studies; must promote mind sets, dispositions, attitudes and appreciations along with knowledge; must utilize extra-curriculum activities through "practice in doing in miniature situations involving citizenship."

5. Health. "Apathy is as apparent in obedience to rules of health as in obedience to social laws." "Physical deficiencies abound in every classroom." "Tendencies . . . . . to physical activity disappear by adolescence and the majority become spectators at athletic contests."

"No more urgent problem exists than to promote better health in American people, and health is now recognized as a mental, as well as a physical problem."

6. Religious and character development. "Religion must be included in the total program of education." The curriculum maker must "integrate all race experience with present day living and problems."

"The frontier thinkers should be used as the layman's committee on curriculum making. The professional school man and woman know the educational implications to be made. Both groups must co-operate to interpret environment to the individual."

Strang, Ruth "Who Performs Personnel Duties?" School Review, XXXIX (January, 1931), 33-41.

The answer to the question in the title was sought through a study of data obtained from 115 principals of high school in the state of New York who had no officially appointed dean of girls. "The principal is the primary personnel officer in schools having no dean of girls or other specialist in different phases of work with individual girls. His responsibilities along this line decrease as the size of the school increases." The principal is most frequently responsible for offering guidance concerning problems of study, vocations, and misconduct. He is also most often responsible for contact with parents through interviews at school, visits to homes, or meetings of the parent-teachers' associations.

The nurse and physical education teachers are primarily responsible for (a) guidance in problems of personal health; (b) handling emergency cases of illness; (c) carrying on a positive health program.

Supervising certain group activities in schools of more than 500 pupils is done by home-room teachers and physical-education teachers.

Helping freshman girls make adjustments to high school life is performed by the principal, home room teacher or other teachers.

"In the majority of the schools the nurse, teachers, or janitors supervise the condition of the school toilet, lockers and other parts of the building used by the girls. In the majority of cases teachers supervise the social aspects of the building such as conduct in halls and cafeterias.

This study indicates "the need of principals and teachers who have specified training in the phases of work with individuals which they may be called on to perform under present conditions."

Lyman, R. L. "Individualization in the Isaac E. Young Junior High School, New Rochelle, New York," School Review, XXXIX (April, 1931), 257-271.

Outstanding features of junior high school practice in this school of 970 pupils are: (1) "Responsibility for discipline is thrown almost entirely upon the pupils as individuals. Pupil self-appraisal and self-control are the keynotes. No pupil monitors, no passing in line, in fact no conspicuous disciplinary machinery involving either teachers or pupils can be observed. The entire school, adults and children as well, regard all incidents of behavior as symptoms, diagnosis of which by friendly conferences can reveal the cause of undesirable or admirable conduct." (2) Socialization within the 35 home-room groups. (3) An athletic program which results in voluntary participation of 83% of the boys and 90% of the girls in intramural sports. (4) Freedom of pupils in varying their academic curriculum. (5) Provisions for individual differences.

The last named is accomplished through (1) Homogeneous grouping with emphasis on the needs of the individuals and of the demands that can fairly be made on them. (2) Follow-up of individual pupils. (3) Providing for special talents in all departments of the school. (4) Constants and variables in 7th and 8th grades and multiple curriculum in the ninth. (5) Adaptation of course of instruction and teaching techniques to ability groups. (6) Extra-curriculum activities covering a wide range of abilities.

"As a total impression an observer carries away a realization that this school is a community, among the members of which exists a dignified and yet unstilted comradeship. Teachers and pupils alike participate in a variety of attractive group activities in which every member is free, within bounds, to follow his own bent. Here is an intermediate school which retains much of the individualized procedure of the primary grades—a procedure too often largely diminished in the middle grades and sometimes abandoned in the upper grades and high school. The school has taken for its motto: 'To Everyone According to His Needs; From Everyone According to His Abilities'."

Wetzel, William A. "Large-Group Instruction." School Review, XXXIX (April, 1931), 288-92.

Three situations are specified by the writer of this article in considering the size of the class for instructional purposes in a high school. "First there are certain exercises in which the teacher is the dominant factor, for example, inspirational reading in literature." "There is a place in the instructional program of a modern high school for a small auditorium seating approximately two hundred pupils." Second, the value of individual laboratory work in science has been overemphasized during the last thirty years. There is a place for demonstration work by the teacher in which not only apparatus but still pictures and motion and talking pictures will occupy the focus of attention. A science lecture-room seating from two to three times the number of pupils in an ordinary group is a necessary feature in a modern high school. Third, appreciation courses in music and art will figure more prominently in the instructional programs in the future than they have in the past."

Proper organization of subject matter and the development of an appropriate technique will make possible an increase in the number of pupils. Suggestions are made of the possibilities of increasing the opportunity of the individual pupil even while increasing the size of classes in history to 60 or 75; of presenting things to pupils en masse and at the same time teaching individuals; of organization in composition for handling large groups effectively and yet enable the teacher to go home without a large armful of papers to correct.

Guiding principles are submitted for use in directing a program of large-group instruction in any high school.

Hennessey, Joseph A. "Boston's Use of Motion Pictures," Journal of Education, CXII (November 10, 1930), 365-66.

Intensive efforts in visual instruction in the Boston schools date back more than thirty years. As early as 1913 a committee was appointed to offer assistance to teachers in the selection and employment of certain visual aids. Definite film schedules are worked out each year by the visual education council on the basis of suggestions received from the individual schools and teachers. Yearly programs vary according to the types of schools and the grades for which the pictures are intended. In order that the visual aids may be correlated with the course of study, the yearly schedules, which reach the schools before the films begin to circulate, make specific references to the particular topics which they illustrate. Complete information about and descriptions of all pictures are provided so that teachers are able to decide in advance whether the film should be used as an approach to the subject, or as a part of the lesson proper, or as a review. As evidence of the success of such a plan of distribution, is the fact that in 1924-25 there were but ten regular weekly showings, whereas during 1929-30 there were more than one hundred weekly showings. The visual education council in Boston realizes that equipping schools with carefully selected materials is not enough. The responsibility of utilizing these aids correctly rests finally with the classroom teacher. The visual education council can only assist in arranging a desirable program and furnishing the materials.

Pratt, Orville C. "Taxation and Public-School Finance," Elementary School Journal, XXXI (November, 1930), 177-182.

School people do not realize the seriousness of the present crisis in taxation and school finance. This crisis is partially the result of mounting educational costs. Between 1899-1900 and 1927-1928 the cost per day for each pupil increased from $0.14 to $0.618, an increase of 341.4 per cent. The causes for this increased cost of education are: (1) the depreciation of the dollar, (2) increased attendance, (3) the disproportionate increase in high-school attendance, and (4) the increase in the number and quality of services rendered by the schools. Another explanation of the serious financial crisis facing public education is our obsolescent and disintegrating tax system. The general property tax, our basic tax, does not conform to the fundamental tenet of taxation that everyone should be taxed according to his ability to pay. A farmer owning a $30,000 farm cannot escape paying taxes on it even though there is a crop failure. Another man with $30,000 invested in stocks and bonds pays no taxes. The general property tax is inadequate to meet modern needs. The only possible remedy is to abandon the general property tax as the basic tax and employ it for local use only. The income tax should be substituted as the chief source of taxes for state purposes, supplemented by a general sales tax on luxuries. If our taxing system is not reconstructed, the schools will face a period when the financial support given them will be insufficient.

Bagley, William C. "Radio in the Schools," Elementary School Journal, XXXI (December, 1930), 256-258.

The "American School of the Air" nation-wide broadcasts, especially designed for the schools, was inaugurated in February, 1930, and continued on Tuesdays and Thursdays for fifteen weeks. The aim of the programs was to supplement classroom instruction by stimulating learning among the pupils. The Tuesday programs were devoted to dramatizations of important historical events. The Thursday programs comprised lessons in civics, art, health, and nature-study, as well as musical broadcasts and a special program for International Good-Will Day. Thirty-five thousand responses were received from pupils, teachers, and even adults long out of school. More than a thousand original poems were sent in as a result of the program in which Edwin Markham read selections from his writings. In view of the excellent endorsements received, a new series of programs has been prepared for the year 1930-1931. There will be five programs a week instead of two, and the programs will be differentiated for the primary, intermediate, junior, and senior high schools. The possibilities of educational broadcasting are very promising.

Lehman, Harvey C., and Witty, Paul A. "Some Factors which Influence the Child's Choice of Occupation," Elementary School Journal, XXXI (December, 1930), 285-91.

Recognizing that the factors which influence a child's vocational ambition are numerous and subtle and often concealed by relatively unimportant, overt indicators, the writers attempted to determine some of the obvious conditioners of vocational and occupational choices by administering the Lehman Vocational Attitude Quiz to a large number of school children between the ages of eight and one-half years and eighteen and one-half years. The results suggest that, of the three types of motivation studied in this test "the expectation of large monetary return is of foremost importance, the hope of obtaining marked social approval is second, and the lure of an easy life is of least importance." While these results are consistent for both sexes and for each age level, money making opportunity and public esteem appear to be stronger influences for the older boys than for the girls of the same age. Beyond age fifteen and one-half there is a noticeable decline in the percentage of children who chose a vocation which they also placed in one of the three categories above mentioned, perhaps because the older children are more influenced by an understanding of what is actually possible for them to do. In order that the ideal of affluence may not influence too greatly the occupational choice it is suggested that (1) courses in vocational guidance incorporate exact data with regard to the financial returns of numerous occupations, and (2) that data be presented which show the present demand for the several types of workers, and exact information as to the financial status of the average wage-earner.

Cammack, James W., Jr. "Liability of School Authorities for the Enforcement of Rules Characterized As Unreasonable by Courts," Elementary School Journal, XXXI (January, 1931), 379-386.

It is commonly believed that teachers and trustees are liable civilly or criminally for the enforcement of unreasonable rules under which pupils have been punished. The writer has canvassed decisions on this point and finds that numerous court cases show the non-liability of officers when called upon to act in a quasi-judicial capacity. Some of these cases are Jenkins and Others v. Waldron, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 114; Dritt v. Snodgrass, 66 Mo. 286, 27 Am. Rep. 343; and McCormick v. Burt, 95 Ill. 263, 35 Am. Rep. 163. The rule is based on principles of public policy, because it would be very difficult to induce persons to hold non-remunerative offices, or any offices at all, if they knew they would be held liable for mistakes in judgment honestly made. The writer found only one case (State v. Vanderbilt, 116 Ind. 11, 9 Am. St. Rep. 820) in which the court definitely took the opposite position. It is safe to say that the weight of authority clearly holds that school officials and teachers are not liable for the enforcement of unreasonable rules when they have acted in good faith.

Edwards, Newton. "Legal Authority of Boards of Education to Enforce Rules and Regulations," Elementary School Journal, XXXI (February, 1931), 446-59; (March, 1931), 504-13; (April, 1931), 619-627.

Statutes usually confer upon boards of education broad powers with respect to the conduct and management of the schools, but the courts are frequently called upon to decide whether a board of education has exceeded its authority in attempting to enforce a particular rule or regulation. Some principles derived from selected cases or common law follow:

1. Universally the courts apply the test of reasonableness in determining whether school officers have authority to enforce a particular rule or regulation. The courts are reluctant to declare a regulation unreasonable, but the conduct which the board undertakes to regulate must have a direct relation to the management and well-being of the school. The reasonableness of a regulation is a matter of law to be determined by the court and not a matter of fact to be determined by the jury.

2. Although the law may provide that all the children of a state have the right to attend the public schools, a board of education may enforce reasonable regulations governing the time pupils may enter the schools.

3. The courts are in agreement in holding that boards of education may not require pupils to pay for injury to school property, if the injury grows out of acts of neglect or carelessness. A Michigan case points out that a pupil can be expelled only for wilful or malicious acts.

4. The state may, through properly constituted authorities, exclude from school all pupils whose presence would jeopardize the health of other pupils; and boards of education, under their general powers, customarily have authority to enforce regulations whereby pupils who are a menace to the health of their associates may be excluded from school.

5. A state may require that all persons be vaccinated, and it may authorize or require boards of education to make vaccination a condition of school attendance regardless of the existence or non-existence of smallpox in the school district. But in the absence of such authority, the right of a school board to exclude pupils who have not been vaccinated from school, as a rule, depends upon the existence or non-existence of smallpox in the community.

6. The legislature may authorize boards of health to exclude from school all unvaccinated pupils; but according to the weight of authority, a board of health cannot make vaccination a condition of school attendance in the absence of an actual or threatened epidemic of smallpox unless expressly authorized by statute. Where an epidemic of smallpox exists or is threatened, a board of health may exclude unvaccinated pupils from school or even order the schools to be closed under its general and implied authority.

7. "Wherever the issue has been raised, the courts have held that boards of education may, when authorized to require vaccination at all, require evidence of scarification and injection of the virus of cowpox into the human system."

8. Where the law makes school attendance compulsory and at the same time requires or authorizes boards of education to require vaccination as a condition of school attendance, the courts are in disagreement as to whether a parent who refuses to have his child vaccinated may be prosecuted under the compulsory-attendance statute. A New York case holds that exclusion from school because of non-vaccination is not a valid defense in a prosecution under the compulsory-attendance act; but other courts take a contrary position.

9. "A board of education may discipline a pupil for any act, no matter where or when committed, provided the act tends immediately and directly to destroy the discipline and to impair the efficiency of the school."

10. While the authority of the state to require all pupils to pursue a particular study has been tested in the courts in only a few cases, there appears to be little doubt that the state possesses such authority. But in the absence of express statutory authority there is some conflict among the courts as to whether a school board may require a pupil to pursue a particular subject against the wishes of his parents. A school board may prescribe the course of study; it may include other subjects than those prescribed by law; and it may deny a diploma to a pupil who has not pursued satisfactorily the prescribed studies. However, a parent may make any reasonable selection of studies from those which the school offers. School authorities have the unquestioned right to prescribe the mode of instruction in any particular subject.

Lovejoy, Philip C. "Satisfied Parents—a Determining Factor in School Progress." The Nation's Schools, VI (December, 1930) 84-90.

The democratization of the modern school has necessitated a change on the part of the teacher toward pupil and parent alike. The real teacher is no longer an autocrat in the class room, but a sympathetic helper; and no longer independent and inconsiderate of the parent, but anxious to secure the parent's understanding and cooperation. Through a program of public-school information parents may become familiar with the technique and objectives of modern education and may be convinced that this education is worth all that it costs. The dissatisfaction and opposition of parents are due very largely to a lack of tact and judgment on the part of the teacher in dealing with individual children. Actual instances are cited to illustrate the almost unbelievable mistakes and utter lack of judgment of poor teachers, who have an antiquated or distorted notion of their obligations to both children and parents. No wonder the parents become hostile and the schools find it difficult to secure the support and financial backing of the community. Parents who understand the aims and purposes of the school and have confidence in the judgment and spirit of service of its teachers are the schools strongest asset.

Sub-Committee on Junior High School Teaching Load, "Teaching Load in Junior High Schools," Chicago Schools Journal, XIII (December, 1930), 169-176.

A report to the Superintendent of Chicago schools by the Sub-Committee on junior high school teaching load, of the steering committee on articulation between junior and senior high schools, sets forth the results of an investigation of the teaching load of junior and senior high schools and gives reasons why classes in the junior high school should be smaller than they are. While 55.7 per cent of the academic teachers in senior high schools of Chicago have pupil-hour loads ranging from 700 to 900, 60.2 per cent of the junior high school teachers have loads ranging from 1,100 to 1,300 per week. The report also shows that the number of non-teaching periods per week is less than five for more than half the junior high school teachers. The committee recommends that ultimately the standards for teacher load should be approximately the same for both junior and senior high schools with five classes and one non-teaching period per day; with no class over thirty in shop and household arts, nor over thirty-five in art, commercial and academic studies, nor over fifty in music and physical education; a maximum of 750 pupil hours per week for teachers of the first mentioned group, of 875 for the second, and of 1250 per week for the third. The committee recommends that class size and maximum pupil load reach this limitation in the case of teachers of shop, household arts, and mechanical drawing at once. They also recommend immediate adoption of the five period day for all; but are satisfied for the present with no class over forty in art, commerce and academic subjects and a maximum of 1000 pupil hours per week. For teachers of music and physical education they recommend for the present no class over 60 and a maximum of 1500 pupil hours per week. In the matter of duties arising from extra curriculum activities in the junior high school, the committee recommends that these duties be equally divided among all the teachers. They also recommend that chairmen of departments be annually elected by members of the departments, and that the duties of assistant principal, dean of girls, and lunch room manager be studied in order that adequate administrative help be provided so that their work can be done in the time allotted by the rules.

Rosenthal, H. W. "The Squad and Leader System," Chicago Schools Journal, XIII (March, 1931), 326-328.

In the Montefiore Special School the pupils are divided into groups of similar age. They select leaders from their numbers who choose the boys in turn until all are in some squad. This gives opportunity for every boy to engage in some form of activity in gymnasium or on playground. A leaders' class is organized to meet twice a week and learn the program of the week in advance, how to play each game, and how to meet emergencies. A change of leaders is made each month to give many boys training in the responsibilities of leadership. Some of the games are indoor baseball, soccer, volley ball, track and field, dodge ball, touch football, basket ball, playground ball, horseshoes, checkers. Tournaments are held. Boys learn co-operation, self-control, ability to choose and follow their own leaders. The leaders learn to assume responsibility.

Jarvis, E. D. "Equipping the School for Radio Reception," American School Board Journal, LXXXII (February, 1931), 61-62.

Home-built radio sets may not be suitable for school. The school set should be compact, simple, and protected by a locked cabinet. It must be sensitive, powerful, and reliable: a high grade set pays. For a one-room school a table model is suitable—all electric preferred. Magnetic type loud speakers are preferable to dynamic on account of convenience in installation. Sets should not be moved too much. For a building of six to twelve rooms a central set with extension is the most practicable. For larger buildings a powerful "master set" with a control and distributing panel is best. New buildings should be planned for a complete radio system.

Ganders, H. S. and Reeves, C. E. "Compensation for Janitorial-Engineering Service." American School Board Journal, LXXXII (February, 1931), 63.

Statistics show that the salaries of janitors and engineers compare quite favorably with those of elementary and high school teachers. The cost of janitorial service varies from 9.1 to 53.2 cents per square foot per year. Few districts pay overtime and relatively few provide for pensions. Most janitors and engineers are employed on a twelve months' basis. Size of buildings is the main factor in determining compensation.

Grizzell, E. D. "English and American Education," School Life, XVI (December, 1930). Pp 71-74.

English secondary education is general in its character with a strong classical and scientific basis. It is a highly selective type and essentially for children of the privileged classes. Of recent years it has tended to favor also the youth of good scholastic attainment and high intellectual ability. Indigent but gifted boys are encouraged by grants and subventions which relieve them of the payment of the usual fees. The number of pupils thus helped is dependent on the available funds which are generally limited.

The cultural and disciplinary character of the English secondary schools is in sharp contrast with the American high school. Here secondary education is an upward extension of educational opportunity for the masses and includes a wide variety of specialized and trade training along with the academic and cultural. Both nations are moving in the direction of greater opportunity for adolescent youths. Economic considerations and the traditions of a much older civilization make English schools conservative while American wealth and freedom from Old World traditions permit more rapid experimentation and change.

Less than 10 per cent of the youth of normal secondary school age attend school in England while in America, public secondary schools are available for all classes and ranks. Most secondary schools in England limit enrollment to 500 or less while in America a single student body has numbered more than 9000.

Coeducational secondary schools are general in America. Few, indeed, of the English secondary schools permit boys and girls in the same school. Many of them provide segregation for the sexes for class instruction.

Both countries are moving in the direction of larger play grounds. The English school is often surrounded by walls, hedges, and closed gates and is thus freer from street commotions and distractions.

English schools are generally more charming and local school traditions are fostered. This is possible because pupils are more homogeneous as to social background and age. Moreover the program of studies is quite closely integrated.

The headmaster has a study but not an office. He is first of all a teacher. The smallness of the school gives him freedom from administrative details which so sorely vex the principal of the larger American school. The accepted American supervisory practices are not resorted to but a technique of improving instruction prevails which appears effective though it is not paraded.

Appelt, J. L. "Administration of Teachers' Meetings," The High School Teacher, VII (February, 1931), 78.

The theme of this discussion is the function of the principal as an agent in the improvement of teachers in service, together with his administrative ability and personal leadership in formulating plans and programs for teachers' meetings.

Qualities of leadership are indicated in queries relating to systematic and thoughtful planning of teachers' meetings. Factors which will aid in producing the proper atmosphere and attitude on the part of teachers are suggested, such as (1) voluntary attendance, (2) promptness in opening and closing, (3) choice of day of meetings by teachers, (4) use of school time and (5) exclusion of routine matters.

Suggestions for getting and maintaining teachers interests are, (1) teachers suggest topics for discussion, (2) submit list of topics from which choice may be made, (3) program committee from teachers and (4) submit definite outline of plan of meeting a week in advance.

Mr. Oppelt writing from experience reports beneficial meetings through this method, by which the interest of teachers has been aroused and held, manifested in roundtable discussions and individual participation.

Harriott, M. E. "Secondary-School Curriculum Development in Los Angeles," California Quarterly of Secondary Education, VI (April, 1931), 268-86.

After a ten year period of decreased activity the city of Los Angeles is again emphasizing work on the curriculum. The view point is different now than it was a decade ago. Now curriculum building is looked upon as a continuous process and not as a temporary reorganization.

A definite and what could easily be a permanent administrative organization for curriculum development in the secondary schools has been set up. The high-school principals association has a definite part in this administrative organization. Curriculum development in Los Angeles secondary-schools is concerned with determining the purposes of education, the program of studies, the organization of this program into curricula, the selection and development of materials of instruction, the preparation of courses of study, and the development and use of so-called curriculum tests. An attempt is made to determine general and specific purposes and functions of secondary schools. Changes which have taken place as a result of these efforts at curriculum development center around two items, namely, basic curricula and requirements for graduation.

High-School Newspaper Service

A free twice-a-month high school newspaper service—combining editorial and typographical suggestions for advisers, editors and journalism classes, with a nation-wide feature service—has just been announced by the American Boy Magazine, 550 West Lafayette Boulevard, Detroit, Mich. Clipsheets will be mailed without charge, every two weeks, to high school newspapers that request them.

In charge of this new service department will be William L. Mapel, assistant editor, who comes to the magazine from the directorship of the Lee School of Journalism, Washington and Lee University. He will be assisted by Miss Marjorie Nordstrom, former secretary of the Department of Journalism, Iowa State College.

High school newspapers may obtain the clipsheets through application to Mr. Mapel in care of the American Boy Magazine. High school editors and journalism teachers are invited to call on him for assistance in publication problems. High school and preparatory schools are asked to place Mr. Mapel on their exchange lists, so that he may study their newspapers and quote from them.

This deals with the normal emotions of the normal child, and points the way toward emotional stability.

DEPARTMENT MATTERS

National Honor Society

Over ten years ago the Department of Secondary-School Principals (then the National Association of Secondary-School Principals) organized the National Honor Society with the end in view of stimulating scholarship in the secondary schools of the United States. To-day there are over one thousand chapters and these are in the best high schools in the country. The four objectives of the society are: to create an enthusiasm for scholarship, to stimulate a desire to render service, to promote worthy leadership, and to encourage the development of character. Every high-school principal who has a chapter is enthusiastic over the productive results of this organization in his school.

Direct all requests for literature to H. V. Church, 3129 Wenonah Avenue, Berwyn, Illinois.

WARNING

The National Honor Society has met with such great success that imitations are springing up in different parts of the country. These pseudo honor societies seem to have largely a commercial objective, and plan to exploit scholarship for financial ends. Members of our department are warned to beware of any plan to sell pins or emblems to pupils under the guise of scholarship, and are urged not to lend their aid or influence to such organizations.

The Department of Secondary-School Principals recommends only the National Honor Society and the National Junior Honor Society.

The National Junior Honor Society

The National Junior Honor Society is patterned very closely after the Senior Honor Society. The Junior Society is designed for ninth and tenth grades in four year high schools, and for eighth, ninth, and tenth grades in junior high schools. This organization is now a going concern, and already there are a number of chapters, both in senior high schools and junior high schools. The national constitution, the model constitution, and booklet of information as well as the application blank will be sent on request.

Direct all applications to:

H. V. CHURCH, Executive Secretary
3129 Wenonah Avenue
Berwyn, Illinois

SEALS AND MEMBERSHIP CARDS

Membership Cards—Since the organization of the National Honor Society there has been a growing demand for membership cards in the organization. Cards of membership both for members of the National Honor Society and for the members of the National Junior Honor Society are now on sale. The cards ( $2\frac{1}{2}'' \times 3\frac{3}{4}''$ ) are engrossed on a fine quality of cardboard, have the emblem of the Society embossed upon them, and require only the insertion of the name of the member.

The price of the cards is five cents apiece.

Seals—The seal ( $1\frac{1}{4}'' \times 1\frac{1}{2}''$ ) is a gilt embossed sticker to be affixed on the diplomas of members of chapters. A replica of the emblem is embossed on the seal.

The price of the seals is five cents apiece.

Plaques—A bronze wall plaque has been designed and manufactured. Schools that have chapters of the National Honor Society will now have the opportunity of having this plaque. It consists of a solid bronze casting mounted on a walnut back. The size is thirteen by sixteen inches and the weight is ten pounds. A chain is furnished. All lettering, as well as the name of the school chapter and the emblem, is raised and polished above the bronze background.

The price is $30.00, which includes transportation and packing.

Order only from:

H. V. Church
3129 Wenonah Avenue
Berwyn, Illinois

National Honor Membership Certificates

In response to repeated demands, the Department of Secondary-School Principals has prepared membership certificates 8½x11 for members of the National Honor Society. These certificates are lithographed on artificial parchment with the die of a facsimile of the emblem stamped in gold. They sell for ten cents apiece postpaid.

UNIFORM CERTIFICATES

The Department of Secondary-School Principals has been distributing uniform certificates of recommendation for over ten years. At first they were sent out free to the members of the Department, but the demand for the certificates became so great that the printing and mailing charges became a burden to the treasury. Therefore, a charge had been made.

The blanks are used in transferring pupils from one secondary school to another and particularly from high school to college. The certificates are sent postpaid at the following prices:

Mailing from	100	200	300	400	500	1000
Chicago
1st zone	$.80	$1.50	$2.20	$2.80	$3.40	$6.00
2nd "	.80	1.50	2.20	2.80	3.45	6.10
3rd "	.85	1.55	2.25	2.85	3.50	6.20
4th "	.85	1.60	2.30	3.00	3.75	6.45
5th "	.90	1.65	2.40	3.05	3.90	6.60

8th "	1.00	1.80	2.60	3.35	4.25	7.20

The blanks will be mailed on receipt of price, or C.O.D.

Direct orders to:

H. V. Church, 3129 Wenonah Avenue, Berwyn, Illinois.

THE STANDARD HIGH-SCHOOL PERSONAL RECORD CARDS

The standard record forms (5x8) which were approved by the Department of Secondary-School Principals at the meeting at Boston are now printed on cardboard suitable for vertical filing systems. This card is especially designed for small and medium size high schools.

Space is provided on these blanks for scholarship records for five years. An extra year is included for pupils of four-year high schools who may desire to do graduate work. It is recommended that six year junior-senior schools use separate cards for the records of the junior and of the senior schools.

When the guidance information called for in the lower right hand corner seems to be of a changeable nature, as would often be true of such items as "Vocational Preference," it is suggested that it be written in pencil so that it can be erased and changed when necessary.

The schedule of prices, postpaid, follows:

Zones	100	200	500	1000
1 and 2	$1.35	$2.65	$4.85	$ 8.85
3	1.38	2.70	4.95	9.00
4	1.40	2.75	5.05	9.15
5	1.42	2.80	5.15	9.35
6	1.45	2.85	5.30	9.55
7	1.48	2.90	5.40	9.75
8	1.50	2.95	5.50	10.00

The cards will be shipped on receipt of price, or C. O. D.

GROUP LIFE INSURANCE

The Department offers to its members life insurance in its most inexpensive form. The salient features of the plan are:

1. Low premium. The premium is ten dollars a year a thousand for those insured for $3,000. See table below for rates for those over forty-five years of age. It can now be guaranteed that the second annual premium of the policies issued to members of the department will be slightly less than the premiums of the first year.
2. No medical examination (with exceptions).
3. Total and permanent disability benefits. If an insured member becomes totally and permanently disabled, his insurance will be paid in monthly installments.

4. Conversion privilege. When an insured member leaves the profession to enter another professional or economic group, he may convert his group policy into any of the policies (except term insurance) customarily issued by the insurance company for the same amount at the current rates of the attained age.
5. Age limit is sixty-five years.
6. Individual policies. These show rights of insured, amount, and beneficiary.
7. Current protection. There are no savings, accumulation, or paid-up features. Insurance is for one year at a time, and is renewable each year, at the option of the insured member.
9. Amounts offered:
 $3,000 for all ages from 21 to 45 (nearest birthday) inclusive.
 Annual Rates for those under 45 years are $10 a year per $1000.
 $1,500 for all ages from 56 to 65 (nearest birthday) inclusive.

Annual Rates per $1,000 for those 45 or older:

Age	Premium	Age	Premium	Age	Premium
45	$11.10	52	$16.90	59	$28.15
46	11.65	53	18.15	60	30.40
47	12.30	54	19.50	61	32.90
48	13.05	55	20.90	62	35.50
49	13.90	56	22.50	63	38.40
50	14.80	57	24.25	64	41.50
51	15.80	58	26.10	65	44.90

Send for application blanks to H. V. Church, Executive Secretary, 3129 Wenonah Avenue, Berwyn, Illinois.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

The Department of Secondary-School Principals is now prepared to offer to its members reduced rates for automobile insurance. If you are interested in protection for your car at a lower premium than you are now paying, fill out the blank on page 46, and send it to H. V. Church, 3129 Wenonah Avenue, Berwyn, Illinois. Be sure to state clearly what coverage you now have, and particularly what you are now paying for this insurance.

The Fort Dearborn Insurance Company assures us that the "special rate will figure about 35% lower than the rate charged by other responsible stock companies."

If you will fill the application blank and send it to the Executive Secretary, the insurance company will quote their special rate to members. You will receive this quotation, and you can then decide if you can save money by accepting this special rate.
